MISCELLANEOUS READING. EXCELLENT ADVICE TO A SON. An old gentleman in Eastern Virginia, writes to his son at Greenbrier, White Sulphur Springs, as follows:

"The fortune-hunter, Simon, is too frepoints of taste and good manners, and the art of quent a hanger-on at watering places to esmaking one's-self agreeable, &c., &c., 1 volume, cape notice. Mark and treasure up your contempt for him, my son. Give him the cold shoulder on all occasions. You will know him by his diligent and exclusive attentions to all the young ladies who are reputed to be great heiresses. He will be a frequent visitor at the cabins of large sugar and cotton plantation girls. Young ladies who have large investments in State stocks will be the objects of his adoration. I would not have you. Simon, to be of that romantic A Narrative of the Discovery of the fate of Sir turn of mind that some people profess to John Franklin and his companions, by Captain be-that you should turn from a lady beities of head and heart were there which we should prize more highly. Money is very useful in the married state. Love is a plant that flourishes remarkably well in an auriferous soil. The chill winds of poverty frequently wither it, and make it look so lank and shrunken that even Cupid would scarcely know his own victims.

"No, Simon, I do not want you to avoid a lady because she is rich, if she is worthy in other respects: but what I would impress upon you is, that you should not seek her for her wealth alone. The priceless affections of the heart, which adorn and enoble humanity, are not to be bartered for gold. The dollar is not the yard stick, so to speak, of human happiness, and he or she who makes it so, will have purchased misery. Money is perishable and ends with life-often beforebut the qualities of head and heart are in-Pen, which is rapidly gaining popular favor; the finite and immortal; they range throughout Quill Pen, known for its resemblance to the Quill | the universe; they live beyond the tomb; they Pen; and last, though not least in excellence, the are the undying parts of man and woman; standard Albata Pen, known for many years as and when I see a rational being oblivious of these for gold, I lament that humanity can so far forget itself and sink so low .-You cannot hold, then, my dear Simon, in too great abhorrence, the character of the Pens in the market. Country Mcrchants, Teach- fortune-hunter-the man or woman who would put a moneyed value upon the heavenborn qualities of our nature. That was a sublime remark made by a stakebound martyr to a rich tyrant: 'Sire, there is one thing which your gold cannot buy for you--an entirely new edition, drawn from the best a good heart-nor can all your treasures

AN EXEGETICAL CURIOSITY.

Some inveterate curiosity hunter, who has acquired experience in discovering hidden meanings in old manuscripts, has just stumbled on what he thinks is a great scientific discovery in the book of Genesis. Some of Notes on Nursing, What it is, and what it is our readers may be amused, if not instructed by it. In Joseph's dream of the eleven stars making obeisance to him, it is said there is an allusion to the signs of the zodiac, the eleven brethren answering to the eleven signs, MRS.
